The man whose name you probably don't know was a respected landscape architect and environmental planner in his time (1600 projects nationwide between 1898-1938). Following his death Manning's great reputation slipped into obscurity. His good works—from the private estates of Gustave Pabst in Milwaukee to a wondrous number of outstanding parks, estates and recreational facilities for Birmingham and Mountain Brook—lived on without the Manning name attached.

Join us as we celebrate a new book on Warren H. Manning's grand accomplishments—and begin to learn about an icon who deserves our interest and appreciation.
